

THE MONTH.

As we have already announced, we shall endeavor to maintain the high literary standing which THE REVIEW has held in previous years, and make every effort to improve it. We wish to impress especially upon our constituents that only by their hearty co-operation may a high degree of excellence be maintained, and at the same time we urge that they may contribute to our paper any articles of a literary character. We particularly solicit stories, descriptions of travel, short essays and poems, and any designs of an artistic nature.

The athletic prospect for both schools this year is very bright. There seems to be no lack of candidates for either team, and with such material at hand, we see no reason why both schools should not turn out winning elevens. In the past, it was no uncommon occurrence for a Cambridge team to win a championship, and we sincerely hope that both schools will live up to the reputation established by former players. We wish them all the success possible and feel sure that we are voicing the opinions of all the students in our schools.

There is one important condition of our schools that we have been very sorry to notice. There seems to be in some instances a lack of school spirit. We don't mean to say by this that there are not those who have the school's welfare at heart. Ah! no, it is very far from that; but, at the same time, it is a fact (though a lamentable one), that the number who do support the school to the best of their ability is small in comparison to the number of pupils who attend. The school and pupils alike would be greatly benefited by the esprit de corps which noticeably distinguishes some of the neighboring schools.

It is far from our intention to give unasked advice, but we think that at this, the beginning of another school year, we may all wisely resolve to maintain higher standards of scholarships, promptness of attendance and unswerving loyalty to the rules and affairs of our schools.

Cambridge Latin and High Schools should be second to none in our Commonwealth; but to lead will require the united effort of all.

The incoming classes should take their part of the burden no less than the middle classes and those who are to end their connection with us next June; all should unite in the hearty, strong, determined effort for the advancement of OUR schools.

We wish to call the attention of our readers this year to a new organization which has been formed in the Latin School. This is the Cambridge Latin School Glee Club. About the middle of last year, through the efforts of Mr. Currie, the club was started, and Mr. George H. Brainard was chosen leader. Owing to the short time available for the improving of such an organization, the Glee Club did not succeed as well as might have been hoped, although the leader worked hard to make it a success. This year the club has been formed early, and Mr. Ellis, '03, has been selected leader. There are a number of fellows who have signified their intention of trying for the club, and therefore its prospects for a very successful season are particularly bright. Still, the leader wishes to urge, through the columns of THE REVIEW, that more should join the organization, for he feels sure that it will be a great benefit to all. He asks especially for tenor singers, and earnestly entreats that whoever can sing this part will come to the rehearsals.

THE REVIEW wishes the club all the success possible, and we second the request of the management. Surely all singers should try to help the organization, and we feel sure that nothing will encourage the management as much as large and regular attendance at the meetings.

We have now fairly begun on a new year of school life, a year to be especially remembered by some because it marks the last period of their high school work; by others, because it is to be the first year spent within the walls of the high schools. A great deal is always expected from the Seniors, and we sincerely hope that those who will leave us next June will not disappoint us. In the first place it is the duty of every Senior to take an active interest in everything which is going on in school, to attend the athletic games, to give what aid he can to the school paper, and in fact to support his school and class in every way. We do not mean by this that the other pupils are exempt from this duty, but that the members of the Senior classes especially should do their best. Their presence is needed at the foot-ball games, at the base-ball games, at the track meets and the crew races. Remember that every extra pupil at any of the games improves just so much the chances of winning. Your presence inspires the players to do their best, and if this is the case, why hold back and refuse to go? Remember this, Seniors, and, in fact, everybody else, and when the time comes for the league games to be played, let us see everyone present to cheer his team to victory!

And now just a word to the entering classes:

We wish them to fully understand that THE REVIEW is published just as much for them as for any of the higher classes, and as this is the case, we expect to receive stories and literary works from them as well as others. Everything, no matter whether it is the work of a Senior or Freshman, will be judged with the utmost impartiality. Any articles may be placed in THE REVIEW boxes in the lower corridors or may be handed to either class editors or the associate editors. We hope that the entering classes will take a great interest in THE REVIEW, and feel sure that they will profit by that interest.

We desire THE REVIEW to remain an indispensable part of the school life, and trust that all who are kind enough to take an interest in the paper will find it one of the delightful features of the year.

To the Editor of THE REVIEW:

It is with mingled pain and pleasure that I comply with your request for a slight sketch of the life of my classmate, Henry Coleman Farrington.

It is a pleasure because of the good will and affection we all had for him, and a pain, because of the necessity there is to tell of his young, hopeful life brought to such an untimely end.

Henry Coleman Farrington was born in Dorchester, July 19, 1883. Shortly after his birth his family moved to Cambridge. He grew up in our midst and was, at the Shepard School, from which he graduated, as he was at the Latin School, an excellent scholar, a clean, wholesome fellow and a high-minded, noble gentleman.

His mind was very acute, and he easily caught the scholarly points of all subjects discussed. This ability made him one of the leading pupils in his class and placed him in the front ranks in scholarship of all the graduates who have gone before. He was always an efficient worker.

From the very first he was prominent in school life, taking an active part in the class athletics, and in his senior year being chosen to fill the position of guard on the school football eleven. His courage was one of his great qualifications. He never shrank from what he considered his duty, no matter what the danger was.

In his home life he was a model son and brother, being ever obedient to his parents and a strong protector of his younger brother and sister. His mother's wish was his law and nobody could make him swerve from it.

For the last three years he had been spending the summer at different summer resorts, earning his way through college. At these places he was most popular on account of his good nature and pleasant ways, and was always considered a faithful worker by his employers. Misfortune seemed to follow him all through his life, he having had several severe accidents, all of which he endured without a murmur. His only thought was of the effect they would have upon his mother.

So he died as he had lived, thinking of others instead of himself. He could not have done otherwise, for his whole life had been unselfish and devoted to his friends.

His end, though sad, was a worthy one; one which typified the man. He died in the brave effort to save his companions. A bright, promising career was drawn to an untimely end, but not without its purpose fulfilled. Those of us who knew him and loved him will be the better all our lives.

How Jemima Came Back to Her Beau.

R. J. EGAN, C. H. S., '02.

That it was shortly after twelve o'clock anyone would know, who had the courage to glance up at the fiery eye of the glorious midsummer sun, hanging from the blue dome of heaven like a gigantic diamond lamp, and blazing forth its broad beams to warm the world, and, incidentally, the little village of B——, the scene of our story. This lovely little village with its quaint, rambling, white houses, its little red schoolhouse, and all the other thousand and one things which make such a spot delightful, is situated among the grand old woods and undulating hills of Maine.

Of course, on the most prominent site, and in the most thickly settled part of this village, there is a country store, where everything from bull's eye peppermint balls to horse liniment, and from salt cod to the most approved shades of calico, may be bought. In front of this store there is a narrow, dusty road winding away in both directions, until finally lost to view as it bends and turns and twists up hill and down dale. Clustering around this store there are a number of houses, which we will not describe, as they have somewhat lost their country appearance by overcrowding.

A quarter of a mile down the road, however, there is a very thrifty looking set of buildings, of a distinctly country type, belonging to a Mr. Lambert, one of the most influential farmers round about. But we must go two miles further on, in which distance there are no more houses, before we come to the dwelling of Mr. Baxton. Here, indeed, is the ideal farmhouse. Here are the overhanging eaves from which the bats fly at night, the rambling woodsheds, the well of ice cold water flanked by prize gooseberry bushes, soon to be covered with large, luscious fruit of a rich, royal purple color, and, in fact, here is everything that goes to make the life of a farmer an enjoyable one. On the west side of the house there is a sour cherry tree suggestive of delicious cherry pies. There, too, is the apple orchard enclosed by low stone walls which run along south of the house, and shut in a large strip of pasture land, where a considerable flock of sheep may be discovered, while still further south tall fir trees lend a pleasant finish to the scene.

On the east side of the house there are two barns and a poultry house. The barns are very large buildings, and, through the half-open doors of the larger, lofts full of hay and grain, and stalls for horses and cows may be seen. A prodigious squealing coming from the direction of the second and smaller barn, leaves no doubt as to the use of that building, while now and then great troops of pretty, pink, curly-tailed little pigs, just right for sausages, rush in and out underneath their home, now going out to have a look at the world, now scampering back again in response to the grunts of anxious mothers, too fat to squeeze through the small openings which serve for their children.

And, alas, that we should have to introduce discord into this peaceful scene, there is a hen-fight going on in front of the hen-house. The participants are two staid-looking Plymouth Rock biddies who, although they ought to know better, are now trying their very best to dig each other's eyes out. Meanwhile a gaudy rooster, excited by the prospect of having two blind wives to support, is fluttering about in great dismay, and vainly trying to restore peace by getting in a peck now and then and by numerous demands for obedience, delivered in the shape of low gurgles in the throat.

At last a successful peck on the part of one of the hens sent the other squawking toward the large barn, there to seek refuge in some hidden nook. With that end in view the sulky female fluttered to the top of a particu-turned the head of almost any idol. But the boy's sunny nature and the good old blood that was in him prevented him from being spoiled.

Yet today Billy's heart was heavy, for he considered himself in deep disgrace. As he lay sullenly digging his heels into the fragrant hay in his father's barn, he wished that he had never been born, for he was was a coward. He, a Baxton, was a coward! For had he not, a larly high pile of hay, but quickly withdrew, with fearful mutterings, on discovering that her secret retreat was invaded by a boy. That boy was twelve-year-old Billy, an only son and presumptive heir to the two-hundred-acre farm of Mr. Baxton, his father.

Billy, needless to say, was the idol of his parents, and the merry, freckled-faced rogue was daily the recipient of burnt offerings in the guise of such things as only a country boy can properly appreciate, sufficient to have few days ago, refused to accept the challenge to fight of a boy no larger than himself, and had he not actually run from his enemy before the face of his fair lady, Jemima Lambert? But the bitter thing of it all, the thing that rankled deepest in Billy's heart, was the fact that Jemima now played with the victor and scorned the miserable, vanquished one. Was there nothing he could do to retrieve that one cowardly action? he pondered, wriggling into the hay until it threatened to bury him.

Communication.

To the pupils of the Latin School:—

This year we have bright prospects in football and we ought to make the best of the opportunity. Many of our old men are with us, and with good coaching, a strong line and a fast set of backs should be developed. The veteran players are Brennan, Ellis, Hopewell, Cahir, Howe, Bushway, Taft and three substitutes of last year's team, namely Conlin, Feley, and Waterbury. All of the old players will occupy their former positions, with the exception of Howe, who is being tried at full-back. Of the substitutes Waterbury is playing tackle and Conlin and Feeley are half-backs. Besides these there are other promising men who are making the experienced players work for their places.

The team with all these advantages will make little progress without good, hard, conscientious practice. Practice is indispensable, and each man ought to consider that his duty. If the team will realize this and will work with an ambitious zeal to do the best it can we shall demand no more.

The school if it desires a good foot-ball team must come forward and support it with hearty interest. 1903 should be the leader in this purpose, and, with the energy that characterized the class of 1902, come to the games and cheer with great enthusiasm. 1904 should, and I trust will, follow in the footsteps of the seniors. Then it is necessary that 1905 grasp the situation and send a good aggregation to the games. As for 1906 and 1907, it remains for the three upper classes to encourage and to obtain their attendance at the league contests.

In my conclusion let me say that this year we have a great chance to win the championship of the league and to secure this desired result I appeal to all the scholars of the school to support and take an active interest in the foot-ball team of 1903.

An Indian's Gratitude.

GRACE A. FELKER, '05.

A cold December day, a cold, gray sky, the wind whistling in and out among the branches of the naked forest, and here and there a tail of smoke curling up through the pines. This was in Virginia, long ago.

It was cold for Virginia. The black earth was covered with many footprints of the Indians who had their wigwams under the trees, through which the smoke was curling.

In this Indian village, all were busy. The women and children ran to and fro about their daily work, while the men sat around under the pines, smoking pipes, the blue tobacco smoke twisting and curling over their heads, and up into the trees, where it faded away. Some of the Indians were busy, though, with fixing skins, and fish, and sundry other things; some were away hunting. On one side of the village was the forest, deep and dark, with its many wild beasts and hooting owls, and all its other curious inhabitants. On the other side was the Chicahominy.

There were other villages situated alternately along the river-banks, with such distances between them that it was necessary to send fire signals from one village to another, when the white people approached them, and thus spread the alarm, until all were aroused. Hardly ever had the whites laid claim to any lands beyond a certain spot above Jamestown, for only too often had they been compelled to witness the frightful massacres, which had taken place at the hands of the merciless American savages, who would break in upon their peaceful dwellings without a moment's warning.

It was getting late in the day, and the hunters were expected home. Small fires were being built to prepare the evening meal, and the wind was getting decidedly cool.

Presently four Indians entered the village, leading with them a young white man, with hands bound, and face badly bruised, whom they had captured a little farther down the river. He had strayed from a party of hunters, who had started from Jamestown early in the day, and as he wandered along through the woods, he had at last come to a place near the river which he had thought to be a settlement of white people. But going a little farther on, he had perceived it to be one of Indians instead.

There was no way of escaping, for already as he looked behind him he saw that some of the savages were on his path. As they led him in among the wigwams, a number of Indians and squaws approached, scrutinizing him keenly and then turned away muttering to each other in a low tone.

Among them was a young Indian girl, with large brown eyes, and a shy, backward manner. She knew who the prisoner was, and recognized him immediately. She said nothing and made no sign, but quietly walked away. In her heart she pitied him, for she remembered how kindly the white people had treated her when she had been their captive.

The Indians tied their prisoner to a guard, and placed him inside one of the wigwams, the opening of which faced the forest. The guard was stationed at one side of this opening, outside, in such a position that he was entirely concealed from the prisoner's sight.

In the centre of the wigwam the customary fire burned clear and bright, showing the white mats, the dressed skins, the implements of war hanging upon the bark walls—all the usual furniture of an Indian dwelling. Outside, in the centre of the village, was heaped a huge mass of logs and dry branches, built by the women and children during the day. The sun sank slowly, casting its red rays down the river and over the marshes, giving the water a fiery hue.

At twilight, the great pile was fired and the dance began. From the darkness came a burst of savage cries, only less appalling than the war whoop itself. Around the fire, again and again, the Indians danced, until the sweat rolled off their dark bodies. The maidens swayed backward and forward, and sang shrilly and sweetly, keeping time with their song as they stamped and jumped, and spun around the fire.

Some fell from sheer exhaustion, others taking their places as soon as they were vacant. All were there, the priests, the conjurors, warriors and maidens—all took part in the weird dance. They struck at each other as they danced, uttering wild, animal-like yells. They grew more and more frantic, and leaped and whirled, and beat their drums, until the clamor became deafening.

The older women sat around watching the dancers and shrieking with loud applause. The stars appeared, one by one, and looked down upon the hideous scene; the prisoner lying in the wigwam awaiting his fate, and the kneeling figures around the fire bent forward watching the dancers. Only one girl seemed to be less interested in the proceedings than the others. She stood somewhat back from her companions and anxiously watched the wigwam in which the prisoner lay.

The evening had worn away, but still they danced on. The Indian maid had stolen, unseen, in and out among the pines to the wigwam she had been watching.

Suddenly the prisoner felt some one touch his arm, and a knife was thrust into the wigwam and put to the cords which bound him to his guard. He looked up and saw that it was Matoax, the Indian girl.

Putting her finger to her mouth, she pointed with the knife to the guard outside the wigwam. He was lying in a stupor, produced by something which Matoax had given him. Stealthily cutting the cords, she helped the prisoner from the wigwam. She stood still for a moment only, listening intently. The sound of the frantic dancers could be heard plainly through the night air. Then Matoax turned again to the captive.

"Go!" she whispered, making a gesture toward the pine trees. The captive started, and ran to the edge of the forest, into which he plunged.

A wild yell arose into the air. One of the squaws had seen him departing, and in the din and noise made by the dancers, could not make it known by any other means. She attracted the attention of the other squaws sitting near her, and, getting up, ran toward the place from which the white man had disappeared. Soon the news traveled to some of the Indian men who had been sitting in the circle of audience.

They sprang to their feet, and bounded to the edge of the woods, yelling fearfully all the while. Matoax had dropped on her knees, and had crept around some bushes, down to the bank of the river, where, in the darkness, she could not be seen.

Great excitement followed—women ran to and fro, screaming in wild confusion, not knowing what really was the matter. The dancers became more furious than ever, and in the commotion, no one saw the gleam of light far down the river on the opposite bank.

But Matoax, alone at the water's edge, away from the hubbub, saw it, and knew that it was the signal. Quick as a flash she was gone. Stumbling along, she soon reached a spot opposite the place where the signal was burning. It was pitch dark, and she could not see across the river what was going on there, but she knew that they must be awaiting their allies. She looked around in vain for a boat. The bank was clear of everything except what grew there. "The good pale people must be saved!" she muttered to herself, again and again.

In her desperation she knew not what she did as she plunged into the cold water and swam out to the middle of the stream. On and on she swam until she got quite near to the other bank. The signal fire roared and crackled, mocking the silent stars above. The pines beyond were inky black against the sky. She was already feeling the dreadful strain, and the water chilled her to the bone. A minute longer—a minute longer and she would be there.

At last she reached the bank, and as she stood on the dry beach she glanced back up the river where her own village was. Nothing could be seen—not even the fire they had built for the dance. All was darkness—thick, impenetrable darkness.

Matoax moved onward. Before her, a little distance on, was the village, situated at the foot of a small hill, on the top of which the signal burned. She rushed around to the other side of the hill, and advanced toward one of the wigwams, which by this time was deserted.

Outside, on the ground, lay some skins and blankets. She hurriedly picked these up and ran to the top of the hill with them. In a short time she had covered the flames, and soon they began to die out. At last the fire was entirely extinguished, and Matoax once more glanced toward her own village. It was the same as before, all darkness. The fire was out now and the white people would be saved, she thought, as she started down the hill to the river bank.

On reaching the water, she once more plunged in and swam out for a short distance. But she found her strokes growing weaker and weaker. She felt numb, too. She struggled again and again, but to no avail. Entirely exhausted, she sank beneath the waves.

On rising to the surface, she thought she heard the dipping of oars in the water, and boats approaching. The sound came nearer and nearer; she struck out desperately once more—and then all was blank.

When she became conscious again, she was a great way up the river. She was in a boat with others. Kind, blue eyes looked down upon her, and then she knew that she had been taken by the good pale people. The gray sky of dawn was above her head, and she closed her eyes again, happy that she was with kind people, and happy that they had passed in safety, for she wished to live with them always.

For the Sake of Liberty.

MARY B. DART, '02.

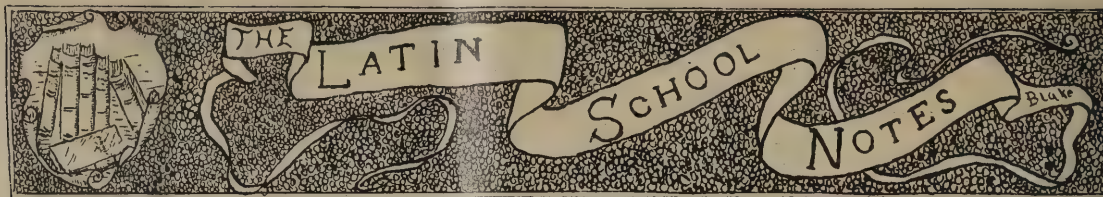

The shades of night had fallen,
The shore-line had grown dim,
When sweet and low on the quiet air,
Rose the Puritan's evening hymn.

They had left their homes and dear ones,
To launch on an unknown sea;
They gave their all in the cause of right,
That we might have liberty.

That we in the future may listen
To the Master's words, "Well done,"
When our work for our country is over,
And our race on earth is run.

Do we think enough of the struggles
They made on our own loved shore?
Do we think of the poverty, sickness, death,
That for Liberty's sake they bore?

Then let us all endeavor
With all our heart and mind,
To give what we can to our country,
To work for the good of mankind,

1903.

1907, 1906, 1905, 1904—aren't you sorry that you are not all seniors?

The class officers for the first half-year are: President, J. A. Detlefsen; Vice-President, Miss Foxcroft; Treasurer, J. E. Eaton; Secretary, Miss Upham.

The members of the Drama Committee for this year are Miss Johnson, Miss Hathaway, Miss Bennett, Messrs. Eaton (chairman), Lamson, Detlefsen and Taft.

We have several new members in the class, all of whom are very welcome.

What will the girls do without Miss Murray in basket-ball?

The boys won the foot-ball banner, the girls must win the basket-ball banner.

At the first class meeting of this year the officers were elected as follows: President, C. W. Burton; Vice-President, Miss Piper! Treasurer, L. M. Potter; Secretary, Miss McKinnon.

The members of the Social Committee are Miss Huling, Miss Hurter, Miss Mandell, Messrs. Potter, Howe and Arnold.

On the Drama Committee we have Miss Gilmore, Miss Luke, Miss Bulkeley, Messrs. Burton, Rogers and Potter.

The new gymnasium work will fall rather heavily on the girls of our class.

T. E. Cunningham, Jr., formerly of our class, is a freshman at Harvard now.

The class officers are: President, M. L. Garfield; Vice-President, Miss Raymond; Treasurer, H. C. Ryder; Secretary, Miss Edna Dougherty.

Do not forget the Debating Society, boys.

Miss Fawcett has been substituting for Miss Munroe, who has just returned from a trip abroad.

1906.

The class officers elected are: President, James Eccles; Vice-President, Miss Mason; Treasurer, S. C. Boyer; Secretary, Miss Russell.

The members of the Social Committee are Miss Mason, Miss Russell, Miss Farquhar, Messrs. Mason, Boyer and Carstein.

Gring, '06, Blen, '06, and Bushway, '06, are on the 'varsity foot-ball team.

Last but not least.

Seven is the lucky number and we are it!

How did the Latin School ever get on without us!

There was never a class of 1907 before and there never will be again, so we must do our best and keep awake.

1903.

At the first class meeting the following officers were elected: President, G. W. Grebenstein; Vice-President, Miss Moreland; Treasurer, Mr. Heator; Secretary, Miss Schlesinger.

The following committees were also elected: Finance Committee, Miss Hayden, Miss Strong, Messrs. Heator (chairman), Ellis and Dunn; Supervisory Committee, Miss Saunders, Miss Jennie O'Brien, Miss Frye, Messrs. Smith (chairman) and Boyd; Drama Committee, Miss Schlesinger, Miss Jennie O'Brien, Messrs. Dunn (chairman) and Hall; Dance Committee, Miss Dunphy, Miss Maddox, Miss Collins, Messrs. Smith (chairman) and Ruggles; Reception Committee, Miss Forbes, Miss Chase, Miss Frye, Messrs. Ellis (chairman) and Boyd; Photograph Committee, Miss Morland, Miss Hayden, Messrs. Heator (chairman) and Taylor; Social Committee, Miss Davis (chairman), Miss Campbell and Mr. Batchelder.

It is hoped that all will attend the socials this year.

Miss Ferdinand entertained the S. I. S. September 25th with a unique stein party, which was a great success.

We are sorry not to see Mr. E. S. Clement back this fall. He will be greatly missed.

Our first class meeting was held October 2d, and the following officers were elected for this year: President, Mr. Milne; Vice-President, Miss Stickney; Treasurer, Mr. King; Secretary, Miss Edith Rice.

It cost Reynolds $.30 to go to Melrose to see a foot-ball game, but when he arrived there he found the game was not to take place that day. Poor fellow!

Several from the Latin School have joined our class.

1905.

Three cheers for '05.

Miss Leach of the Latin School, '06, has joined our class.

Who lost his seat in the hall?

Freshmen! we give you a hearty welcome!

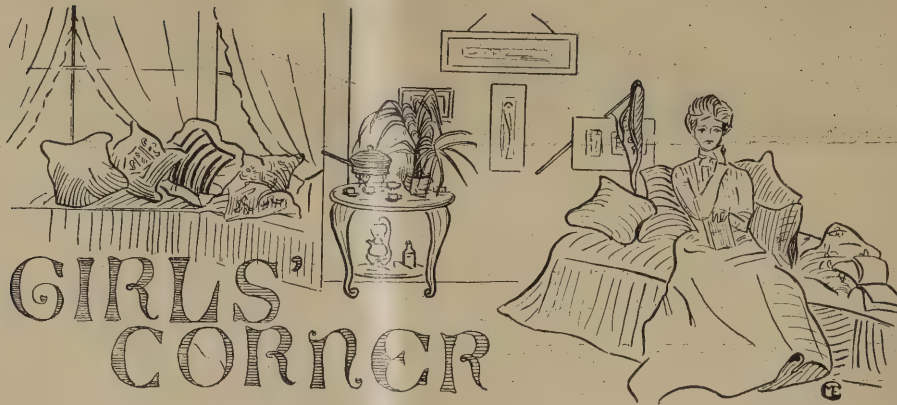

We are sorry to miss so many old classmates; but we wish those that have left us a large amount of good luck.

1906.

We have reached our destination, High School.

Boys are really at a premium in our class.

Some of us have moving chairs!

A very popular and pretty occupation for spare moments is basket weaving. This is now being introduced into many schools; but without much difficulty a girl can work the weaving scheme out by herself, and then it is much more satisfactory. Much of this work is done by the Abernaki Tribe of Indians, who now are much distressed because of the failure in the crop of the sweet-scented, vernal grass. The large baskets for every day use are made from white ash strips, but the fancy baskets, such as the Indians sell to the summer visitors, are composed of ash as a framework, while the colored, sweet grass gives the finishing beauty. Those girls who gathered a little sweet grass in the summer can make attractive baskets for Christmas presents. There are many different shapes and sizes, and many different uses for the baskets.

Girls are ever alert for new colors in the arrangement of their rooms. One of the most original is the "poppy room." The wall-paper is what first suggests this design, for one can find many pretty patterns in this. Then the whole frieze around the room is a perfect garden of large poppies. The pincushion may be made of four yellow poppies and half a poppy makes a whisk broom holder. A box for holding twine may be made in the form of a poppy and a pen wiper be cut out of red leather, with stamens and petals of cloth. This makes a cheery and unusual room.

HIGH SCHOOL.

Now that school has commenced and we are somewhat settled down to study and our customary duties, we at once begin to think of basket ball and gymnastics. The girls are very anxious for the gymnasium to open again. It is to be hoped that we will soon be allowed to have the use of it, for we all feel the need of the beneficial exercise after our ten weeks' vacation. Basket ball practice will probably commence about the last of October. It is to be hoped that all the classes will take the same interest in it that they did last year; and, most of all, that the girls will support their several class teams.

It would be well if we did not show so much feeling in the championship games. A true athlete is known by his or her readiness to accept defeat cheerfully, knowing that he or she has been outplayed by her opponent.

First Farmer—Say, Bill, I see in the paper that people down Boston way are slitting their dogs' tongues.

Second Farmer—What's that for?

First Farmer—O, so they will have creases in their pants.

"When did the molasses kiss?"

"When it saw the sugar spoon."

"Mary, did any one call when I was out?"

"Yes, Mr. Snooks."

"Snooks—Snooks? I don't know anybody by that name."

"Probably not, mum; he called to see me."

"Mary, didn't I tell you I liked my beef well done?"

"You did, marm, but I didn't say anything, did I? People can have ther whims if they want to, for all o' me."

Mrs. C.—I wonder where in the world the alarm clock has gone. I saw it on the mantel yesterday.

Mr. C.—It was there yesterday, but I heard it going off this morning.

Mrs. C.—Well, I hope it hasn't gone where you told it to go.

A man, being invited to take a drink, replied;

"No, no; I solemnly promised my dear, dead mother never to touch a drop; besides, boys, it's too early in the morning; besides, I've just had one."

On board one of the Florida steamboats an Englishman accosted the Captain with the remark:

"I understand, Captain, that you think nothing of steaping across a meadow where there's been a heavy fall of dew."

"Well, I don't know about that," replied the Captain, "but it's true that we have sometimes to send a man ahead with a watering pot."

Nurse (to young husband)—A beautiful ten-pound baby, sir!

Young Husband (getting things mixed in his excitement)—Glorious! Am I a father or a mother?

At a dinner, not long ago, someone asked the ex-Prime Minister what memory was.

"Memory," replied Lord Rosebery, "is the feeling which steals over us when we listen to our friend's original stories."

Clerk—You can't get these boots on. You should try a size larger.

O'Rafferty—Niver do yez moind. Oi'll be able to get thim on after Oi wear thim a toime or two.

FOOT BALL

LATIN SCHOOL.

SOMERVILLE HIGH, 15; CAMBRIDGE LATIN, 0

On October 1, Latin School was defeated by Somerville, at Broadway Oval. Somerville won through superior weight and team work. Our team played a snappy game, but a noticeable fault was that the line played too high on the defensive. The field was very wet, resulting in many fumbles.

CAMBRIDGE LATIN, 5; MEDFORD HIGH, 0.

On October 3, Latin School defeated Medford High at Combination Park, Medford, by a score of 5 to 0. The teams were quite evenly matched, both being especially strong on the offensive.

CAMBRIDGE LATIN, 5; ST. MARK'S, 0.

On Saturday, September 27, our team met St. Mark's Academy, and for the first time in the school's history of foot-ball defeated them by a score of 5 to 0. It had been raining hard all the morning and the grounds was very wet and slippery, so we decided to play two ten-minute halves. The touchdown was scored in the first half by Taft, who got the ball on his old trick, a delayed pass, and ran sixty yards for a touchdown. During the rest of the game neither goal was in danger. THE CLASS FOOT-BALL GAMES.

The series of class foot-ball games were played on Saturday, September 20, at Charles River Park. Each game consisted of two ten-minute halves, and the contests were run off in the following order: First, 1906 versus 1907, which resulted in the former's victory by a score of 5 to 0; second, 1904 played 1905, in which the final score stood 10 to 0 in favor of 1904; then 1903 contested with 1906 and won by two touchdowns; the last and deciding game was between 1903 and 1904, and ended in a victory for 1903 by 5 to 0.

The following is the list of candidates who have been trying for the team:—

Brennan, Ellis, R. Ellis, Good, Macy, Gring, Blen, Cahir, Bushway, Mason, Styles, Scott, Bagdasarian, Wyman, Conlin, Feeley, Murphy, Taylor, Carter, Perkins, Howe, B. Elwell, A. Elwell, Edwards, Miller, J. Murphy, W. Bushway, Church, Hopewell, and Taft (captain). Total number, thirty.

Tennis.

The annual fall tennis tournament was held on Jarvis Field, Saturday, October 4th, for a cup offered by H. C. Durrell, '01. Beard, '06, won the cup last year. The score:—

First round: Beard, '06, defeated Rivinius, '03; 6-1; 6-1. Taylor, '04, defeated Foster, '06, 9-7; 6-0. Morris, '04, defeated Ketchum, '04, 6-2; 6-1. Tillinghast, '03, defeated Smith, '06, 6-4; 0-6; 6-2. Garfield, '05, defeated Ellis, '06, 6-0; 6-2.

Second round: Taylor defeated Morris, 6-3; 5-7; 6-4. Tillinghast defeated Allen, '06, 6-2; 6-0.

Semi-finals: Garfield defeated Tillinghast, 9-7; 6-2.

Finals: Beard defeated Garfield, 6-0; 6-0.

High School Athletics.

The High School foot-ball team played its first game of the season with Melrose High, at Melrose. The game resulted in a tie, with neither side scoring. The average weights of the teams were about the same, and, taken as a whole, High School's work was encouraging.

Friday, October 3rd, our team went to Newton to play Newton High School. Both teams played well, but owing to the superior weight of the Newton team, Cambridge was defeated by the score of 15 to 0.

Altogether, High School has a very promising outlook before her, and thus far the coaches have been greatly encouraged by the playing of the team. The fellows play very well together considering the time of the season, and with plenty of material there is no reason why High School should not turn out a winning team.

To most mothers the children's wardrobe is a continuous, perplexing problem. Their needs are various; those who go to boarding school require a different outfit from those who stay at home and attend private or public school. The fact that our business is conducted entirely for the outfitting of Infants, Children and Misses is why we sell goods that are exclusive in style, quality and workmanship at prices below those usually asked for common place garments.

DO YOU KNOW

Why Wide-awake Teachers everywhere read the "PHOTO ERA" regularly?
FOR THREE REASONS:

1st — BECAUSE Photography is the latest and most successful educational appliance, and, in the opinion of the best educators, is destined to revolutionize the science of education.

2d — BECAUSE The "Photo Era" is the only publication in the country that follows the development of photography along educational and artistic lines.

3d — BECAUSE the beautiful half-tone pictures and carefully written text of the "Photo Era," filled with new ideas, will help them to win fame and fortune in their profession. Why not join the army of "Photo Era" readers and become a winner?
